1st Invasion Phase Success

zone. The third, still to be fought, was the battle against the Luftwaffe's strategic reserves, which were expected to counter the invasion forces.

Engagement of the German strategic reserves "is necessary before a material advance can be hoped for," an official summary of the situation said.

EXPAND COMBAT AREA

The battle in France was revealed to have expanded markedly from the original combat area as the Germans threw in masses of tanks and crack troops in an effort to stem the Allied advance before the beachheads became a major base for the invasion.

With the 21st Panzer Division in action, fighter-bomber pilots reported that Mark VI Tiger tanks were moving up to the front.

British air forces maintained strong and steady pressure all day in support of the British, Canadian and American armies, hammering bridges, rail lines and airfields far out beyond the beachhead.

Speakers emphasized that until the invasion was well under way, the sides have been engaged in difficult fighting, it will be impossible to gauge the success of the operation or the elimination of mobile reserves.

At present some phases of the battle are ahead of others, even even with the other and behind it, it was said.

NAZI MOVE PLANES

The Germans already have switched some air reserves to fight the battle area. German aircraft have the big advantage of a large number of aircraft.

It was the air forces under the command of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower were able to counter the operation until the Allied plan became known.

Merrill Muller broadcast that reports at Allied support headquarters in London were told that the "major battle in France joined."

U.S. Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson said in Washington that the full force of the American counterattacks in northern France will be expected to begin at any moment.

Developing Allied successes on the first day of the invasion, Dwight D. Eisenhower said in a statement by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower that his command had been "completely justified."

Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery were "perfect."

British troops attacked the Paris-Cherbourg railroad were reported by the Nazis to be striking southward from Bayeux, 17 miles distant, where a violent street battle was going on.

German broadcasts told of a movement of British troops southward from Bayeux, indicating that a drive had started to seal off the invasion peninsula.

The Nazis said American forces had established footholds, and so the big port of Cherbourg.

It was disclosed that the Allies had established landing strips in Normandy and an air base on the aerial strip to the beachhead had been opened with the moving in of supplies as the situation of casualties.

There was no indication that the Allies captured coastal airfield or established temporary landing strips, but it was reported that temporary steel mat strips provided by sea-borne engineers.

GREATER SUPPORT

The establishment of fully usable air strips would mean greatly increased support for the land army by short range fighters close to the battle front.

As a result of the first 24 hours of invasion campaign, Eisenhower said in a statement at an advanced command post, "My complete confidence in the ability of the Allied armies, navies and air forces to do all that are asked to do has been completely justified."

Field reports said British and Canadian troops had captured a number of towns and villages, advancing on open roads to some miles from the coast. Infantry men rode to battle on the advance.

The Canadians were reported to have landed inland and taken several hundred prisoners.

PUSHING INLAND

Hos Muro, Canadian press correspondent, in a dispatch dated June 7, said that Canadian forces in France, and Canadian infantry were pushing inland. He added the terrain was suitable for tank fighting. This was the first time that Canadian troops were in the Allied invasion area.

Shils, Man—were among the Allied forces dropped by the thousands from the formidable beachheads. The German forces have claimed many British and American paratroopers and air-sea troops have been captured, but have not mentioned Canadian.

German broadcasts said thousands of paratroopers yesterday descended on a number of places in the vicinity of Coutances on the west coast of the peninsula.

GOING "EXCELLENTLY"

A B.B.C. correspondent at the front reported a "heavy" air battle in progress in one sector of the front.

Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery, commander of the Allied forces, told a correspondent about a British war effort in France.

"Everything is going excellently," he said.

Clearing winds and diminishing waves in English Channel after two days of high surf and low flying aircraft were reported.

Informations and supplies by the German forces were known to be missing reserves for an attempt to force the invaders back into the sea.

Counts on Stopping Invasion

Germany Still Expects to Win

Peace Written For All People Urged by Pope

By GEORGE TUCKER

ROME, June 8.—(AP)—Pope Pius XII urged correspondence in his first press conference since becoming Pope "to write of a peace that can meet the approval of all well-meaning people."

"You are most welcome. You have a mission of tremendous importance," His Holiness said in greeting the newsmen as he entered the throne room of the Vatican.

"If it would be well to have a message for you, it would be that Christ gave to the world the words spoken back in 1940 on the eve of Christmas:

"It is a man's duty to be in the service of his neighbor and to be in the service of his neighbor is to be in the service of God."

His Holiness, thin and pale but with a gleam of brotherly love in his eyes, said: "Well for a peace that can meet the approval of all well-meaning people—that is what I want for the world."

"The war should be only a means to the end of peace, and even more, toward the supernatural life of brotherly love."

A Personal Gift

Edmonton Red Cross officials are appealing for more blood donors. They point out that since the invasion has begun, the need for increased quantities of plasma will become acute.

Under the circumstances, there should be little need for such an appeal. For if the hearts of Edmonton people are with the boys in the field, as they undoubtedly are, there is no better way they can demonstrate their loyalty and devotion to their fighting sons and brothers than by donating to them the most personal gift of all.

Everything being considered, it is easy to give money for the waging of the war. It is easy to send gifts of clothing, food, wearing apparel. It is easy to write daily letters.

All these things are essential and the volume of them must be kept increasing.

But none of them can compare with the giving of blood from one's own body, the most personal gift of all.

No Japs for Alberta

The Hon. Ian Mackenzie, minister of pensions and health, declares that the Japanese should not be permitted to enter the British Columbia. He promises that he will support no government or party that permits them to return.

Mayor Andrew Brown of Calgary declares that Japanese should not be permitted to settle in Alberta, that Alberta people do not want them.

The opinion seems to be almost unanimous that the Japanese should be kept out of the western provinces of Canada. Only the infinitesimal minority of zealous humanitarianists advocate having them in the country.

It is not time that the view of the majority should be translated into action, that all his emphatic opinion should be made the basis of an official policy. It is not much use objecting to the Japanese unless there is some law to implement that objection.

Petaín at the Microphone

Marshal Petaín stepped out of the kind of obscurity that has sheltered him for many months from the attention of the world in order to beg the people of France to do nothing to help the Allied troops who are fighting to rescue them from the alien tyrants under whose domination they have lived and only existed, for the last four years, if his Nazi masters ordered him to do so they have imposed no greater humiliation on the aged and decrepit general than the microphone of his own accord, only the pity due to senility can have him from the contempt of his countrymen.

Petaín should be invited to Frenchmen in the fight to wipe out the disgrace of 1940 and re-establish France among the great powers of the world. He should be invited to tamely submit to the yoke, accept for themselves and their children a position of inferiority, and betray by their acquiescence the men who are fighting to free the United States and Canada who are offering their lives to make France again free.

This offence is not only against the people of France, but it is a betrayal of treason also against every Allied country, and is particularly aimed at the Allied soldiers who are fighting to free France from the French slave. If his counsel is heeded, Allied soldiers will pay for Petaín's treachery with their lives.

At least the Marshal might have held his silence—and for once defied Hitler to do his worst to a man for whom life is worth the few more years of existence, the years of honor or happiness. Four years ago Petaín signed the death warrant of France, willingly or unwillingly. He could have done something to redeem that crime even by refusing to ask his countrymen to play the craven in this their hour of opportunity.

More to Come?

No information has been given out as to the strength of the expeditionary forces landed on the coast of Normandy. From the number of ships engaged and the quickness with which a landing beach was seized and expanded to a considerable depth it is evident that the invaders were sent over in sufficient numbers to deal with the opposition. In either case, the Nazis in particular area. But whether or not this is intended to be developed into the major assault in the west is only guesswork.

The choice lies with the British command. Mr. Churchill long ago predicted that there would be landings in more than one coastal sector, and it may be that this is the first of a series of such attacks. The enemy seems to suspect so, for the Paris and Berlin radios are nervously reporting the movements along other stretches of the coast. These movements may be the promised "feints," or they may indicate—as the broadcasters surmise—that other attacks are coming. In either case the Nazis are evidently being kept on the alert from Spain to Denmark and are not likely to shift forces in masses from the Low Countries to Normandy.

There may be significance, too, in the fact that Goering's Luftwaffe did not offer battle in any serious way when the landing force made on Tuesday. It is estimated that the be-muddled Marshal has about 2500 first-line fighters available for use on the western front. It is apparently saving them for heavier or more sinister attacks elsewhere. The valley of the Seine leads to Paris, and the British are the real objective, and the plans may be to get there by some more direct route.

There is no reason to suppose that the coastal defences were weaker in the Le Havre-Cherbourg sector than in others. Since they were breached there, the notion that these defences were impregnable has been shattered. But the British are on that account to risk pulling reserves out of other threatened areas.

Moscow observes that things are fairly quiet on the eastern front but mentions that the Nazis lost 7,000 men, 305 tanks and 313 planes in seven days around the Romanian city of Iasi. The Moscow announcer seems to consider the day all but lost when the enemy manoeuvres do not run to five figures.

King Emmanuel made good his promise to hand over his powers to the Crown Prince as soon as the Nazis were driven out of Rome. He remains head of the House of Savoy and titular monarch, but Humbert will exercise the Royal prerogatives as Lieutenant General. The change will presumably consolidate the elements making up the coalition government, since this was the arrangement they demanded, and the Italian support more strongly to the Allies.

Ankara has relayed reports that severe steps have been taken by the Nazi authorities in Bulgaria to put down a popular uprising. The reports may be premature, but if so they are prophetic. Nothing is more likely to happen than that the Bulgarians should be provoked to rebellion by Hitler and Himmler will exhaust their repertoire of savagery to crush the movement and keep control. If that satellite Bulgaria were to rise out of the Axis orbit, the other Balkan states would flare into rebellion.

The Nazi forces in Italy are veterans of the fighting in Africa and on the eastern front. They have all the advantages of fighting behind well-prepared fortifications in a mountainous country. They have ample equipment, brought relatively short distances over excellent rail and road transportation lines. But they are joining ground, have been turned out of successive lines of defence, and are in some danger of being trapped in large numbers. The effect on German morale, whether great or small, cannot be other than bad.

An aircraft engine capable of developing three thousand horsepower is being installed in a new type of U.S. airplane. Whether or not it proves to be remarkably successful in driving bombers or fighters, the fact that so much power can be built into an engine small enough and light enough to be carried by a plane has tremendous significance for the future of the transport industry. However remote a general deposit or a forest may be, there need not be hampered by difficulty in transportation. The airplane will be able of driving the necessary machinery.

Approach War Problems from Opposite Angles and Purposes

By MARQUIS CHILDS
WASHINGTON—Two new books which could hardly be more unlike each other than President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill. To his associates, the President is a man of peace, detachment and calm. Churchill, on the other hand, is a man of war, of action, of the most intense preoccupation with the big event, brooding over its outcome and its consequences.

The Nazi forces in Italy are veterans of the fighting in Africa and on the eastern front. They have all the advantages of fighting behind well-prepared fortifications in a mountainous country. They have ample equipment, brought relatively short distances over excellent rail and road transportation lines. But they are joining ground, have been turned out of successive lines of defence, and are in some danger of being trapped in large numbers. The effect on German morale, whether great or small, cannot be other than bad.

An aircraft engine capable of developing three thousand horsepower is being installed in a new type of U.S. airplane. Whether or not it proves to be remarkably successful in driving bombers or fighters, the fact that so much power can be built into an engine small enough and light enough to be carried by a plane has tremendous significance for the future of the transport industry. However remote a general deposit or a forest may be, there need not be hampered by difficulty in transportation. The airplane will be able of driving the necessary machinery.

CCF Can Win in Saskatchewan

I hear from those who ought to know that the C.C.F. will find the provincial election in Saskatchewan on June 15.

It will be a fine thing for Canada if this is so. Among many other reasons that will be an excellent thing for the country.

There are many explanations for the fact that the C.C.F. is likely to win the provincial election in Saskatchewan. The C.C.F. is the most difficult to apply.

Indecent, some of the more Machiavellian of the eastern Tory advisers, like Lou Golden of Toronto, are trying to pull the C.C.F. into the Saskatchewan election, so that the C.C.F. will be able to pull the C.C.F. into the Saskatchewan election.

There are two things wrong with Lou's reasoning. The Progressive-Conservatives have no punch either to pull or let go, in Saskatchewan. Secondly, the C.C.F. will not necessarily be discredited in Saskatchewan if victorious in the Saskatchewan election.

Churchill and Roosevelt Have Different Outlooks

For all his preoccupation with the war, Churchill's humanness comes out from time to time. Not long ago, the Prime Minister was in the White House and he was talking to the President. He was talking to the President about the war, but he was also talking to the President about the peace. He was talking to the President about the future of the world, and he was talking to the President about the future of the human race.

Old and New Holders of All Sorts Are Used Now

These old-fashioned women who thought flowers were simply put into vases and that was all there was to it, are now being taught to use unusual flower containers.

There is a challenge to create new flower containers, and to develop the existing ones. What has happened is that the woman who used to put flowers in a vase, is now being taught to use unusual flower containers. She is being taught to use containers that are not just vases, but that are also works of art.

District News in Brief

Court is Sitting

In North Country

PEACE RIVER. Supreme court is being held in the Alberta Hall by Mr. Justice W. A. Macdonald. There is only one jury trial on the docket and this was held Tuesday afternoon, a statutory offence, Rex vs. Green, a statutory offence. After deliberating only a few minutes a verdict of "not guilty" was brought in and the accused was released. The jury consisted of William McIlroy, Gordon McConnel, George Brown, Reginald Record, Ernest Raymond and George H. Cambridge.

The three-day drizzle that ushered in the month of June was a last minute relief to a desperate condition due to the long continued dry weather of the earlier than usual spring which followed a winter of little snow. Water what was the chief sufferer and fields were basking in it. Some farmers had already turned stock into the fields in order to keep the grain from rotting out while very short, thinning to do not occur by the middle of June. The rain penetrated into the ground several inches and the mark of improvement is now noticeable. Calfworn and wire worms have done a lot of damage, some fields being cut to serious proportions.

The town has started out the present year with a much needed improvement on the east side of main street where workmen are now engaged in laying an eight foot sidewalk from the Hanco block to the corner of first street. When this is completed the entire business section of Main street will have been removed from the board walk category.

STEWART

D-Day... the greatest armada of all time slips through the night... ships, men, guns, tanks.

Zero-hour... air-craft screams down... naval guns roar... assault craft ground on shore... the attack... the landing... INVASION!

The vital flash hits the desk of the Canadian Press London Bureau, is instantly on its way to the people of Canada. The story of the invasion is under way.

Through almost five years of war, Canada's newspapers have built up the overseas staff of the Canadian Press, their news-handling co-operative. Their duty to the waiting folks at home grew with Canada's armed might. The London staff of five became 14.

Through CP, which covers the world for Canada, the invasion reports of Reuters, the Empire agency, and The Associated Press, world-wide American news agency. Because even these were not enough, CP trained Canadians to cover Canada of war.

MUNRO

For D-Day, the invasion team grew to five men, each battle-tested in his job. Heading them is Ross Munro, the only Canadian who went to Spitzbergen, Dieppe, Normandy, Sicily, Italy. With him for the drive into Europe is Jim Stewart, veteran of the 1st Division's fight through Sicily and Italy to Ortona.

Covering Canada's share in the air is Louis Hunter, once air correspondent and Mediterranean veteran. With the Royal Canadian Navy, on its greatest of all convoy jobs, is Allan Nickleson, for two years war correspondent from Belfast to the Med.

Assigned to the French-Canadian troops he has covered through Sicily and Italy is Maurice Desjardins, who represents CP's French-language newspapers.

These five war correspondents for years have written for the home folks the stories of fighting Canadian in five campaigns. They have trained with the troops, lived with them and have gone into battle with them. They know their business, they know their dangers. They're proud of their job—Assigned to Invasion.

Fine Job Is Done
By Bryan Field
At Delaware Park

NEW YORK, June 8.—Race tracks and other sports promotions experienced a difficulty with wartime transportation problems might occur, Bryan Field, New York racing writer.

Field, taking time out to be general manager of Delaware Park, turned to a nifty job of bringing back the sporty plant situated at eight miles south of Wilmington.

Delaware Park, in the horse country, is run by the duPonts, Deans, Hoses and Laury's stables. It is a non-profit-making organization.

Earnings go into maintenance and purses, which accounts for Delaware Park having a larger daily purse distribution than a number of other tracks.

It is a pleasure to visit Delaware Park, which is described as a pleasant cross between Saratoga and Hialeah. There is no drinking at Delaware Park, so customers leave pleasantly and promptly with their heads and hearts clear.

Those getting shut out or picking the wrong plugs can't attribute it to being held up at the bar. Delaware Park, in the horse country, is run by the duPonts, Deans, Hoses and Laury's stables. It is a non-profit-making organization.

much older and more famous tracks. If racing people ever get around to building the so-called ideal track in New York, first they undoubtedly will attempt to amend the New York law to make it similar to that of Delaware.

The latter is considered model and was drawn with the specific design of making the construction of another track in the state unprofitable.

Danny Gardella Becomes Spark Of N.Y. Giants
By HARRY GRAYSON

NEW YORK, June 8.—Daniel J. Gardella, 43 1/2 inches and 160 pounds of him, snapped the Giants out of a slump at 10 p.m. in a losing streak, but anyone who tells you the product of the husky sandlot is a Dodger at heart.

With the manpower shortage at its severest, the Giants had only to look a few blocks from the Polo Grounds to find their spark.

Danny Gardella was recommended by Joe Birmingham, the old Cleveland outfielder, who stumbled into him in a Bronx shipyard in which both were employed. Gardella, 24, was in the Detroit chain gang for three years until freed by Commissioner Landis in the whole sale purge of 1931, was starting with the company's club in an industrial league.

HAS GOOD ARM
Gardella, left-handed all the way, is a little Babe Herman in the outfield, but warts the ball for distance, is exceptionally swift and strong, and is one of the best arms he ever saw. The versatile and acrobatic Gardella runs faster on his hands than some of the old-timers gallop on their gums.

Gardella, one-time hard elevator operator, is a philosopher, poet, singer, singer, comedian, and a bug on health. He reads the finest literature, delves into philosophy and psychology. He's crazy about poetry and symphonies, bursts out with operatic arias under the shower.

The ignited Italian was an instructor in a girls' gymnasium and is an ex-amateur boxer with four knockouts. He does setting up and eye exercises, relates how he once stopped a fast ball with his middle finger to see if a pitcher was hot. The black didn't have much to be said.

Otherwise a perfect physical specimen, a burst of exertion tore him out of the service. He is a cut on vitamins.

HAS SPECIAL FANS
Gardella has just learned how to wear sun glasses. He was nearly killed at Wrigley Field when he couldn't flip them down in time. Demon Danny is an erratic flip-chaser, but his kiltian, put Joe Medwick and his 333 average in the dugout. Wee Danny is particularly adept at the Chinese type of home runs manufactured at the Polo Grounds. One minute he'll give Mel Ott heart failure with a daffy ball under an easy pop. Then he'll make a home run.

At Wilson, N.C., a special bleach-
